STORY HOUR

A Rabbi was delivering a shiur about the life and accomplishments of the great tzaddik, the Chofetz Chaim. He began telling a story that occurred many years before:

There was a teenager in the Yeshiva of the Chofetz Chaim who was found smoking a cigarette on Shabbos. The staff and students were appalled. They wanted to throw the boy out of the Yeshiva. When the Chofetz Chaim heard about this transgression, he dealt with it in his own way. He sent a message for the boy to come to his house. Needless to say, the bachur walked into the house shaking with fear. He spent a few minutes alone with the boy. No one knew what transpired at that meeting. But it was known that that particular boy was never Mechalel Shabbos again.

The Rabbi continued his shiur and slowly all the people left the room, except for one elderly gentleman who appeared to be crying. The Rabbi gently asked him what the matter was. "I was that bachur in story!" said the gentleman. "It was me that smoked on Shabbos. And I'll tell you the other part of the story. The Chofetz Chaim held my hands and looked in my eyes with a deep pained expression. He repeated 'Shabbos, Shabbos,...' with tears running down his cheeks. And every time I look at my hand I can feel the warmth of those tears, and they are my constant reminder about the sanctity of Shabbos."
